Portrait of street life in the oldest all-black town in America. Tales of an All-Night Town is the riveting story of the charismatic James Bollinger, law enforcer and desperado.

Bollinger was shot to death on November 14, 1973, on the main street of Brooklyn (a.k.a. Lovejoy), Illinois, a tiny town across the mitigate, if not erase, the crushing effects of the poverty and racism that had not – and still has not – been overcome. This was the era of “attitude,” of exuberant Afro hairstyles and platform shoes and bellbottoms, of “Super Fly” and The Godfather and the heyday of Soul Train, of jukeboxes blaring Marvin Gaye, Johnnie Taylor, and Elvis Presley's all-too-relevant then – and now! – “In the Ghetto.” Tales captures it all in documentary style, with Bollinger's main man, the Dancer, and other unforgettable characters often stepping out of the action to tell the story in their own voices, which contain as much humor, eloquence, and courage as they do resignation, anger, and despair.

When Tales of an All-Night Town was first published, in 1979, it was compared to Norman Mailer's The Executioner's Song and Truman Capote's In Cold Blood. Ericka Blount Danois (Love, Peace, and Soul) has likened it to The Wire.

The story that Elin

Schoen Brockman

found during four years of visiting Brooklyn to investigate what was at first reported as one cop shooting another in self-defense was not of good guy versus bad guy; it was an epic tale of men who were both good and bad, of the women who loved them, and of the hard facts of life and death in Brooklyn's bars and crap rooms. As the Dancer says, "I had to do things you call bad. But they wasn't bad to me, you know. They kept me alive. It was survival." "Stands the test of time...I was struck by the precision of its reporting, the lean rigor of its language, the empathy of its voice. When white writers enter a black world, especially a black world of drugs and sex and violence like that of Lovejoy, there has been a terrible history of exoticization. Elin Schoen Brockman, to the contrary, finds the stubborn ordinary humanity, the glorious complexity of the human condition, in Lovejoy's demimonde.

was startled by a powerful gust of wind that blew his front door clean off its hinges.

Standing on his doorstep was a bizarre, wizened old hag wrapped in a moldy, moth-eaten cloak that smelled strangely of wet dog and split pea soup. Seconds later, Sir Jasper found himself in possession of an ancient, rotting book of magical and portentous tales and a terrifying letter that ordered him to share the contents of the book with the world or else.

Sir Jasper slowly turned the crumbling pages and began reading the tales of Cinderella, Rapunzel, Hansel and Gretel, Little Red Riding Hood, and the Three Little Pigs.

These were not the old,
