The history of Taiwan seems to present some remarkable discontinuities. The long development of a maritime frontier for settlers from South China was altered around the edges by the opening of ports to trade and the whole island to foreign residence after the Arrow War. The occupation by Japan in 1895 was a more profound discontinuity.

Taiwan: A New History - Taylor & Francis
Taiwan, including the P' eng-hu islands (Pescadores), was ceded to Japan in 1895 at the conclusion of the Sino-Japanese War of 1894-95. This sudden act ushered in a fifty-one-year period of colonial rule in Taiwan that is now undergoing a major reassessment.

Even a long term resident of Taiwan like me has found plenty of things I never new about the place. Actually, a lot of the history in this book would be unknown to the Taiwanese themselves! My only small complaint about this scholarly and thorough work is the total lack of Chinese characters; even in the index Romanized forms only are found.

As a result of the surrender of Japan at the end of World War II, the island of Taiwan was placed under the governance of the Republic of China, ruled by the Kuomintang, on 25 October 1945. Following the February 28 massacre in 1947, martial law was declared in 1949 by the Governor of Taiwan Province, Chen Cheng, and the ROC Ministry of National Defense. Following the end of the Chinese Civil War in 1949, the ROC government retreated from the mainland as the Communists proclaimed the establishme

History of Taiwan (1945–present) - Wikipedia
Taiwan: A New History is a "collaborative history," to use Murray A. Rubinstein's terminology, that seeks to develop several themes: (1) that Taiwan's political, socioeconomic, and religio-cultural background is defined by China's expansion; (2) that the island's history is influenced by the conflict and cooperation between the native or Aboriginal population and the immigrant Chinese; (3) that Taiwan became "Westernized" as a result of colonization by the Dutch and by Japan (a Western ...
