1. Death. Death is life's ending. To clarify death further, we will need to say a bit about the nature of life, and ask whether life can be suspended or restored, and how it relates to our continued existence. We can also distinguish between the concept of death and criteria by which death can be detected.

The implications for life after death are profound. How we understand time is completely flawed. Time, space and death are all illusions, according to this theory. This theory has been termed "biocentrism" and is being developed by Robert Lanza. He was recently named one of TIME Magazine's 100 most influential people in the world.

Biocentrism: There's no time and no death

We believe in death because we have been told we will die. We associate ourselves with the body, and we know that bodies die. But a new scientific theory suggests that death is not the terminal event we think. One well-known aspect of quantum physics is that certain observations cannot be predicted absolutely.

"The Death of the Author" is a 1967 essay by the French literary critic and theorist Roland Barthes. Barthes' essay argues against traditional literary criticism's practice of incorporating the intentions and biographical context of an author in an interpretation of a text, and instead argues that writing and creator are unrelated. The title is a pun on Le Morte d'Arthur, a 15th-century compilation of smaller Arthurian legend stories, written by Sir Thomas Malory. The essay's first English-langu
